

Peter Andre in pieces as Katie Price goes on another bender in Ibiza and has blazing row with new boyfriend

They were 1,800 miles apart yesterday - but for love-torn Peter Andre and Katie Price it might just as well have been a million.

While the tearful singer hugged his mum in Cyprus and pleaded "Give me strength", defiant Katie reverted to her boozy Jordan alter-ego on the party island of Ibiza.

Peter, 36, couldn't contain his emotion as his Greek-born mother Thea flew into Larnaca with his sister Debbie in a surprise show of support.

They had made a 15-hour flight from Australia to be there for him - and he was clearly overwhelmed.

A friend said: "He had no idea his mum was coming so when he went to collect his sister at the airport and saw Thea, it was all much. The emotion of the past six weeks caught up with him, and as much as he tried to hold it together, he simply couldn't.

"Thea will give him some much-needed TLC, and wants to look after him as only a mother can. She'll do him a world of good."

In stark contrast, Katie, 31, enjoyed another wild night out in Ibiza, where she is shooting her latest calendar.

As Peter tucked into a barbecue with their children - Harvey, seven, Junior, four, and one-year-old Princess - she was involved in an amazing shouting match with new boyfriend

Anthony Lowther, 28.

The male model was heard whimpering, "This is too much - I can't take any more" after storming out of Katie's £500 a night suite at the plush Es Vive Hotel.

A pal told him: "Look, she's drunk. It's been a hard few weeks and this is her way of escaping it. Please don't walk out on her now."

Jordan could be heard screeching at 5.30am after an eight hour bender with friends: "I don't give a f any more!" Staff repeatedly banged on her door to tell her to turn down the volume as irritated guests complained to the concierge.

Earlier, as she knocked back a succession of Jack Daniel's and coke, she told fellow holidaymakers: "I am Katie Price now - demure, sophisticated and elegant."

"I am going to walk properly - but after midnight, Jordan is coming out and you know what that means. Have some of that you mother f. I can drink what I like and do what I like. Sorry mum."

To raucous applause from her pals, including the crew from her TV reality show, she then whipped up her skimpy white dress and flashed her boobs to the bar.

She had taken more than four hours to get ready - with £100 bottles of Veuve Clicquot champagne being ferried to her room.

When she finally emerged at 10pm, she was already unsteady on her feet as she went down to the bar. She then jumped in a limo to take her to upmarket club Pacha, where she was ushered into the VIP area.

There she met up with Anthony and soon began bumping and grinding with him against the railings of the club.

In between breaths, she knocked back £20 vodka lemonades - and later snogged a mystery girl pal in a hotel bar.

Yesterday Katie was forced to scrap filming of her new reality TV show because she slept in all day.

A source said: "She was in no fit state after the previous night."

HISTORY OF MIGRANTS IN AUSTRALIA

New book by Zangalis

The highly anticipated presentation of Greek-Australian author's, George Zangalis book on the history of migration in Australia will take place at Olympic Hall in Adelaide on July 5th.

The Greek-Orthodox community of South Australia in cooperation with the General Confederation of Labor Unions in Australia, South Australia Labor Center, Migration Services Center and the "Platonas" Labor alliance presented on June 5th during a special ceremony, the book by syndicate activist, George Zagalis, titled "Migrant workers and Ethnic Communities: their struggles for social justice and cultural rights, the role of Greek-Australians".

The presentation will be made by Janet Giles, secretary of South Australia's Labor Unions, together with Dr. Michael Tsoulis on Sunday, July 5th at 4.30pm at Olympic Hall 288 Franklin Street, Adelaide. .

The book, according to the president of Australia's Labor Confederation, ACTU, Sharon Burrows, "comprises a unique example of Australian history on how multiculturalism developed in the working class through the work places, migrant organizations, schools and its influence in public policies.

The book presentation was also attended by the president of the community, Vasilis Elovaris, Evgenia Tsouli of the Migrant Resource Center and Panayiotis Byrros, vice-president of the committee of multicultural affairs South Australia.

A few words about George Zangalis

George Zangalis was born in Greece in 1931, the fourth in a family of five children. He grew up and did his secondary education during the Resistance of the Greek people and his own family against the German occupation and the Anglo-American imposed civil war. He came to Australia in February 1950. He became immediately involved in the working class and progressive organisations in the Greek community, the wider Australian Labour Movement and the fledgling multicultural campaigns, a commitment he keeps to this day.

He worked at first in the car industry, then as a political organiser for the Communist Party of Australia and since 1970, until his retirement in 1996, in the Victorian Railways and the Australian Railways Union where in 1975 he was elected fulltime organiser, and in 1988 president.

He has been a foundation member and leading official of the Ethnic Communities Council of Victoria, the Federation of Ethnic Communities Councils of Australia, and Community Broadcasting. He served for several years on the ABC State and National Advisory Council and the SBS board in the early 1980's.

He is currently president (and a current affairs broadcaster) of Melbourne's ethnic communities radio station 3ZZZ, and president of the National Ethnic and Multicultural Broadcasters' Council of Australia.
