

Expert tips to look your best

You would be hard-pressed to find a man more invested in making sure Australian women look fabulous than cosmetics king Napoleon Perdis.

Gemma Ward, Melissa George and Sophie Monk are among his clients, and since moving to Los Angeles a few years ago he's build up a serious international star following.

And now Perdis (who first became interested in make-up at the age of 13 when he helped his mother get ready for a party) has condensed all his cosmetic knowledge into one tome.

Forever Flawless: How to look your best at every age is meant to provide an all-round guide to make-up for every woman. The models are not airbrushed superstars, but "real" women with before and after photos.

Kicking off with a guide to the tools of the trade, skin types and maintenance, the book goes on to dispense advice useful for any woman who could use a helping hand making up her face.

Teenagers should "embrace their precious teen years, contradictions and all," to find out who they really are; at the other end of the scale, women in their sixties and over should work their "mature allure", Perdis states.
